

erica on photography

My name is Erica Foley. I am the woman, the mother, the wife, the daughter, the sister, or the friend who sees the world through the lens of a camera. I'm always searching for the moments that you would capture if you were looking at yourself. I look for the tiny flashes in time that would be so easily forgotten without the click of a camera.

Sixteen years ago a teacher took the time to change my life. She helped me come face to face with my passion – that thing in life that gave me purpose and allowed me to feel complete – photography. Without this outlet, all those special times with my family and friends, my children, and my husband would be lost in the corners of my memory.

I want my children to grow up and look back on the pictures I've taken and remember those days we spent together as a family. I believe it is truly a blessing to share this gift with others and to capture a moment in someone's life so they can hold onto it forever. (scroll down ...)

all images and content copyright of erica foley photography/music by ingrid michaelson

I wrote this for photographer Erica Foley for her site www.ericafoleyphotography.com. The picture above is a screen shot of the page.

Erica on photography

My name is Erica Foley. I am the woman, the mother, the wife, the daughter, the sister, or the friend who sees the world through the lens of a camera. I'm always searching for the moments that you would capture if you were looking at yourself. I look for the tiny flashes in time that would be so easily forgotten without the click of a camera.

Fourteen years ago a teacher took the time to change my life. She helped me come face to face with my passion – that thing in life that gave me purpose and allowed me to feel complete – photography. Without this outlet, all those special times with my family, my children, and my husband would be lost in the corners of my memory.

I want my children to grow up and look back on the pictures I've taken and remember those days we spent together as a family. I believe it is truly a blessing to share this gift with others and to capture a moment in someone's life so they can hold onto it forever.

I think of our time on this planet as a book filled with memories. As each day passes, a page of the book containing the delicate flashes that make up our existence here is turned. What would a book of your life be without the photographs that capture your husband's laugh, the gentle touch of your beloved grandmother, or your child's first mud pie? It is these little details that make our time here so special.

I consider the opportunity to step into another person's life with my camera to help them fill their book with those endearing moments the highest honor.